Task 8. Writing (max - 20)

"The best teachers are those who show you where to look but don't tell you what to see."

Alexandra K. Trenfor

Alexandra K. Trenfor once wrote: "The best teachers are those who show you where to look but don't tell you what to see."

One may consider the comment at hand to be complicated, so I will "decipher" it. The author implies that the most qualified teachers <sup>not only</sup> guide their students, but also let them make their own judgements and form their own opinions. I wholeheartedly agree with the author. Now, let me explain why. (-76 words)

I believe that a teacher influences a child the same amount <sup>gr</sup> that a parent does. Teachers are part of the education system, therefore they play a grand role in ~~letting~~ making a child become a full-fledged member of society. Technically, the only thing a teacher absolutely must do is to teach (as in, giving out tests and taking in homework). But technicalities like these can make or break a child. In my opinion, clarity of mind and critical thinking matter the most when it comes to education. (-166 words)

My point is illustrated beautifully in "Vagabond", a legendary Japanese novel by R. Takehiko. In the novel, the main character is a young ~~man~~ samurai, wandering in search of new battles. He thinks himself to be invincible, until he loses to a much stronger enemy. His self-esteem crumbles, he's lost and confused. His journey could've ended right there and then, if it wasn't for his mentor, who confronted the boy's views and guided him into mastering his craft of martial arts. (-245 words)

In conclusion, the best teachers enable a student to become a better version of themselves through careful guidance and experience. (-265 words) 264 for the new government to make children, as the future of the country, think in the way it was appropriate for this government. That's why history teachers were lying about some historical facts and were showing the former government authorities as a bloody establishment that hadn't paid any attention to people's needs. Because of this many children were given with wrong information and any other point of view was forbidden.

Personally, my first school teacher was a very kind woman, who showed me different aspects of the world, explaining pros and cons of different actions, but she never told me how to act and what to think, that's why I consider her as the best teacher in my life.

In the end, I'd like to say that the role of a teacher in the child's life is really important, consequently, teacher is the person that should show where to look but never tell what to see.
