"The best teachers are those who show you where to look but don't tell you what to see."

Alexandra K. Trenfor

gr I completely agree with this statement. The way I understand author's point of view is that teachers shouldn't just give you information, they should make you search for it so you will make your own conclusions about it.

Lex gr I strongly agree with Alexandra K. Trenfor, because if students learn to search and proceed information, they will be way more educated than now. This way of teaching kids will help those kids when they will become adults. It will help them adapt in future life where you will face tons of information you need to proceed and sort out every day.

gr synt. Especially with Internet now. Often people struggle to take so much information, so we need to teach people how to deal with it.

sp. lex. lex. For example, let's talk about Lomonosov. Even tho he was alive a long time ago, people still remember him and his doings. Not only that, scientists still think that his works on chemistry and physics are true. Not only that, they still gr/gr use his works even after so many time. Why is that?

Because Lomonosov looked beyond the barriers. He knew how gr to work with information, so he didn't spent his time at sp things that weren't important.

In conclusion, I think that if you want to succeed in life, you need to learn how to work with information and search for it.

for the new government to make children, as the future of the country, think in the way it was appropriate for this government. That's why history teachers were lying about some historical facts and were showing the former government authorities as a bloody establishment that hadn't paid any attention to people's needs. Because of this many children were given with wrong information and any other point of view was forbidden.

Personally, my first school teacher was a very kind woman, who showed me different aspects of the world, explaining pros and cons of different actions, but she never told me how to act and what to think, that's why I consider her as the best teacher in my life.

In the end, I'd like to say that the role of a teacher in the child's life is really important, consequently, teacher is the person that should show where to look but never tell what to see.
